Late plowing will kill the cutworm and many other insects. Cold does not injure insects in the ground. It is the exposure to cold, warmth and dampness that destroys them. Late plowing brings them to the surface and renders them liable to destruction.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live bet-ter than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance. Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

"August Flower"

Eight doctors treated me for Heart Disease and one for Rheumatism, but did me no good. I could not speak aloud. Everything that I took into the Stomrch distressed me. I could not sleep. I had taken al. kinds of medicines. Through a neighbor I got one of your books. I procured a bottle of Green's August Flower and took it. I am to-day stout, hearty and strong and enjoy the best of health. August Flower saved my life and gave me my health. Mrs. Sarah I Cox, Defiance, O. @

THE THREE ROBBERS.

[A Riddle They were three rothers age.
And they rob ed a rel red rose:
And they came from out the sky.
And they went where no man knows.

And a sable cost he wore.

And a best of dusty gold.

And he robbed her treasure store;

One came when the day was rewar, And rent the curtain gray
Of mist that round her hun;
And he stole her pearls away

Oge came when the day was dead, And no one saw him pass
And he cau this her petals red
And threw them upon the grass.

Three robbers hold were ency.
And they robbed a red, red rose:
And they came and went away,
And whither—no man knows

They Wanted to Know.

James Ferguson, the Scotch astronomer, was very anxious, even as a little boy, to understand the mechanism of watches. His father refused to allow him to 'play with" his watch, and so James waited until a stranger called at the house one day to ask his "Will you be good enough to tell me what time it is?" asked the boy. The gentleman told him.

"Would you be willing that I should look at your watch?" continued Fer-"Certainly," replied the gentleman.

The boy took the watch cagerly. After he had examined it for a moment his next question came:

"What makes that box go round?" "A steel spring," replied the owner. "How can a steel spring in a box turn it round so as to wind up all the

The gentleman explained the pro-

swered young Ferguson. "Well, now," said the traveler, who had become deeply interested in the boy, "take a long, thin piece of whalebone, hold one end of it fast between your thumb and forefinger and wind it around your finger. It will then attem t to unwind itself, and if you fix the other end of it to the inside of a small hoop and leave it to itself it will turn the hoop round and round and wind up a thread tied to the outside

"I see it! I see it!" exclaimed Ferguson enthusiastically. "Thank you very, very much!"

It was not long before he made a wooden watch, which he enclosed in a case about the size of a teacup.

The boy was afterwards set at work to watch sheep at night. Here he had nothing to watch but the stars and his future eminence in astronomy was, in a way, founded upon that boyish out-of-door observation.

Blaise Pascal, who wrote a remarkable treatise on the laws of sound, was constantly observing the familiar occurrences about him, even as a boy. When he was only 10 years old he sat at the dinner table one day striking his plate with his knife and then listening to the sound.

"What are you doing with that plate, Blaise? asked his sister. "See!" he replied. "When I strike the plate with my knife it rings.

Hark!" Again he called forth the sound. "When I grasp it with my hand so," he said, "the sound ceases. I wonder why it is?"

Riding a Camel.

Perhaps you "rode a camel" at the world's fair; if so, you will ap preciate what Mrs. Amelia B. Edwards says about it:

The camel has its virtues, so much at least must be admitted, but they do n the on the surface. My Buffon tells me, for instance, that he carries a water eistern in his stomach, which is meritorious. But the cistern ameliorates neither his gait nor his temper, which are abominable. Irreproachable as a beast of burden, Le is open to many objections as a steed. It is not pleasant to ride a beast that not only objects to being ridden, but that chershes a strong personal antipathy to ithe rider.

You know he hates you from the moment you walk around him, hesitating where and how to begin the ascent of his hump. He does not hesitate to tell you so in the roundest terms. He snarls if you but move in the saddle, and stares angrily around at you if you attempt to move him in any direction save that in which he himself intended to go. If you persist he tries to bite your feet. If biting you doesn't auswer, he lies down.

Now, the lying down and getting up of a camel are performances designed expressly to inflict grievous bodily harm upon the rider. Thrown twice forward and twice backward, punched in his "wind" and damaged in his spine, the luckless novice receives four distinct shocks, each more sudden and unexpected than the last. For this execrable hunchback is fearfully and wonderfully made. He has a superfluous joint somewhere in his legs, and uses it to revenge himself upoti mankind.

His paces, however, are more complicated than his joints and more trying than his temper. He has four-a short walk, like the rolling of a small boat in a chopping sea; a long walk, which dislocates every bone in body: a trot that reduces you to gd a gallop that threatens to the daring experi-

The Prince of Turnips.

There were two brothers who were both soldiers, the one was rich the other poor. The poor man thought ne would try to better himself, so, pulling off his red coet, he became a gardener, and dug his ground well, and sowed turnips

When the seed came up there was one plant bigger than all the rest; and it kept getting larger, and seemed as if it never would cease growing, so that it might have been called the prince of turnips, for there never was such a one seen before, and never will be again. At last it was so big that it filled a cart, and two oxen could hardly draw it; and the gardener knew not what in the world to do with it, nor whether it would be a blessing or a curse to him.

One day he said to himself: "What shall I do with it? If I sell it, it will bring no more than another; and for eating little turnips are better than this. The best thing, perhaps, is to carry it and give it to the king as a mark of respect.

Then he yoked his oxen and drew the turnip to the court and gave it to the king. "What a wonderful thing!" said the king: "I have seen many strange things, but such a monster as this I never saw. Where did you get the seed? or is it only your good luck? If so, you are a true child of fortune."

"Oh no!" answere I the gardener; "I am no child of fortune. I am a poor soldier who never could get enough to live upon; so I laid aside my red coat and set to work tilling the ground. I have a brother who is rich, and your majesty knows him well, and all the world knows him; but because I am poor everybody forgets me."

The king then took pity on him and said: "You shall be poor no longer. will give you so much that you shall be even rither than your brother."

Then he gave him gold and land and flucis, and made him so rich that his brother's fortune could not at all be compared with his

When the brother heard of all this, and how a turnip had made the gardener rich, he envied him sorely, and bethought himself how he could contrive to get the same good fortune for himself. However he determined to manage more cleverly than his brother, and got together a rich present of gold and fine horses for the king, and thought he must have a much larger gift in return; for if his brother had received so much for only a turnip, what must his present be

The king took the gift very graciously, and said he knew not what to give in return more valuable and wonder ful than the great turnip; so the soldier was forced to put it into a cart and drag it home with him.-Grimm's

Animals Can Count.

Not less interesting were similar experiments with horses. In the village of Pekoe the doctor found a peasant's horse, which was used for plowing and which had acquired the habit of counting the furrows and stopping to rest regularly at the twentieth. So confident was the plowman of the horse's calculation that at the end of the day he used to estimate the amount of work done, not by counting the furrows himself, but by simply remembering the number of times his horse had stopped to rest.

In another village the doctor found a herse that was able to count the mile-posts along the way, and that had been trained by its master to stop for feed whenever they had covered twenty-five versts. One day they tried the horse over a road where three false mill-posts had been put up between the real ones, and, sure enough the horse, deceived by this trick, stopped for his oats at the end of twenty-two versts instead of going the usual twenty-five.

The same horse was accustomed to being fed every day at the stroke of noon. The doctor observed that whenever the clock struck any hour the horse would stop and prick up his ears as if counting. If he heard twelve he would trot off contentedly to be fed, but if there were fewer strokes than twelve he would go on working resignedly. The experiment was made of striking twelve strokes at the wrong time whereupon the horse started for his oats, in spite of the fact that he had been fed only an hour before.

Easy Electrical Experiment.

Take a glass, expose it to the fire so that it shall be perfectly dry and place it upside down on a table. Afterward take a tray, perfectly dry, and place it upon the glass in such a way that it shall preserve its equilibrium. Finally take a sheet of paper slightly smaller than the tray, heat it and rub it rapidly with a brush and it will become quickly electrified. Then place it upon the tray.

An electrical machine will thus have been constructed without any expense. If the finger be brought near the tray a spark will appear. This spark will be so much the brighter and the series of sparks will be so much the longer in proportion as the glass and tray are drier.

If, while the sparks are being drawn from the tray, the room be darkened, these sparks will appear extremely brilliant.
